With a history in electrical contracting extending back three generations, Loren Wesley Vankirk guides Vankirk Electric as CEO. He oversees the quality and cost-effective execution of projects across the country. Loren Wesley Vankirk's focus is on electrical subcontracting that meets the needs of owners of multi-family developments. He adapts services provided to project parameters and offers solutions spanning communications, low voltage, and structured cabling requirements.

A key to Mr. Vankirk's success over the past two dozen years has been building trusted partnerships in states ranging from Florida to California. Design/build services integrate the latest technologies and include device-linked automation solutions that provide tenants with control of apartment systems through a simple app.

His grandfather served as the assistant chief electrical inspector in Washington in the 1970s and 1980s, and Mr. Vankirk prepared for the field by pursuing an electrical apprenticeship at Green River Community College. Prior to his endeavors with Vankirk Electric, he built a successful career as an electrical contractor who undertook projects throughout the Midwest and West.
